Chapter 1 by Elisabeth Ford

Far, far into the future.....Or perhaps, the distant past....

The human race spread across the galaxy establishing colonies on distant planets. Their population exploded until over 500 billion humans inhabited the cosmos.

But resources were exhausted, birth rates plummeted, and the human race entered a age of decline.

A movement began calling for a return to mother Earth.

However, the tiny planet could not possibly hold such an epic repatriation.

A long and bloody conflict erupted over the right to return and became known as the "Homecoming War."

A new governing body "The Gaia Communion" emerged to bring the war to a close.

The communion declared Earth "an eternal sanctuary" to which no one was granted passage. Instead, Earth was used as a symbol for order to gaze at from afar, while colonists on dying planets waited out their demise.

But there was one man who resisted. Who continued to venture across the abyss of space. An immortal space pirate, who provoked and plundered federation warships for the last hundred years.
